

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

In July 2019, the University of Saskatchewan will be hosting the Canadian Society of Soil Science (CSSS) Annual Meeting. The theme of the conference is Profiling Change: A century of soil science, which recognizes that 2019 marks the 100th anniversary of the Department of Soil Science in the College of Agriculture and Bioresources. We are working on a great line-up of invited speakers and special sessions that address current and emerging soil, environmental and agronomic issues. We expect to welcome approximately 250 delegates from across Canada and beyond, including researchers, graduate students and practitioners, to our beautiful University of Saskatchewan campus. We are hoping that you will consider sponsoring this important event.

The Canadian Society of Soil Science is a non-governmental, non-profit organization for scientists, engineers, technologists, administrators and students involved in the various aspects of soil science. We strongly encourage student participation in our society; at the annual meeting, students present their research and take part in professional development sessions, field trips, and technical workshops.

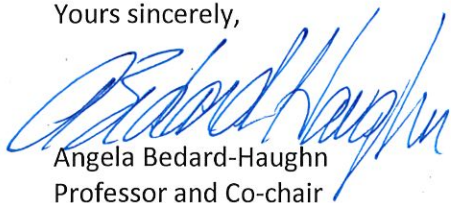

Sponsorship opportunities are outlined below. See agbio.usask.ca/csss2019 for more details.
